Why shearing horses is so important:

Near the end of the summer the natural rhythm of the horse switches to “cold mode” and replaces the summer coat with the winter coat.

This natural protection against the cold is problematic for horses that are used in winter.

The horses sweat more under a winter coat and this leads to longer drying times for the coat. If a wet horse is placed back in the stall or in the pasture health problems can arise. Shearing the horse is therefore highly important for the health and well-being of the horse.

Shearing of older horses with Cushing syndrome in spring time is also important. Because these horses are unable to switch back to their summer coat the thick winter coat remains.

Through shearing the natural heat flow is restored and the horse will be protected from the summer heat.
